FAQs

When can I take leave hours?

You can only take leave hours when you have actually taken leave. Please contact your correspondent at NL Jobs to request for your leave hours to be paid out. Please note that you must have sufficient accrued leave balance to pay out the leave hours.

What is the purpose of the artificial constructions law (Wet aanpak schijnconstructies, WAS)?

Each person working in the Netherlands is entitled to be paid the minimum wage. This means that your employer may not withhold or deduct an amount from the minimum wage. However, your employer may withhold or deduct an amount from the portion of the wage above the legal minimum or from the holiday allowance. This law makes an exception for the amounts withheld for accommodation expenses and health insurance costs.

The ban on contributions does not apply to income tax and pension contributions. This is because there is a legal basis for making these contributions.

What are 'ET kosten' (withheld extraterritorial costs)?

This is a tax scheme that provides a tax-free allowance to an employee from abroad who comes to work temporarily in the Netherlands.

In that case, a temporary worker may waive (exchange) a part of his or her taxed wage to receive a tax-free allowance in return.

The following taxed wage can be exchanged:

- Holidays in excess of the legal entitlement (the maximum exchangeable wage for holidays in excess of the legal minimum is 81%).
- Allowances for irregular working hours and overtime (the maximum exchangeable wage for allowances and overtime is 100%).
- Wage in excess of the legal minimum wage (the maximum exchangeable wage above the legal minimum wage is 81%).

The following extraterritorial costs can be exchanged:

- Double accommodation expenses
- Transport to and from the Netherlands
- Extra maintenance
 - Prices in the Netherlands are often higher than those in your country of origin. Based on the figures in each country, we calculate on a week-by-week basis the maximum allowance for extra maintenance.

What is the difference between the income tax and social insurance contribution ('loonheffing'), income tax and social insurance contributions credit ('loonheffingskorting'), and the special rate ('bijzonder tarief')?

Income tax and social insurance contributions are calculated for the hours you work. The white weekly wage table from the Dutch Tax and Customs Administration ('Belastingdienst') (<https://www.belastingdienst.nl/wps/wcm/connect/nl/personeel-en-loon/content/hulpmiddel-loonbelastingtabellen> [only available in Dutch]) shows exactly what must be paid on which gross weekly wage.

Income tax and social insurance contributions credit as of 1 January 2019

1. Employees who reside within the Netherlands are entitled to receive income tax and social insurance contributions credit.
2. Employees who are residents of an EU country other than the Netherlands, an EEA country, Switzerland, or either Bonaire, Sint Eustatius, or Saba are only entitled to income tax credit. They therefore are not entitled to social insurance contributions credit.
3. Employees who are residents of a third country and so do not fall under category 1 or 2, are no longer entitled to either income tax or social insurance contributions credits.

Special rate

The special rate ('bijzonder tarief') income tax and social insurance contributions applies to one-off or exceptional rewards such as overtime and holiday allowance. Compared with the basic salary, a higher tax rate applies to these rewards. This means that the net amount you keep from such rewards is ultimately relatively lower than what you keep from your basic salary.

When are the amounts set aside paid out?

Holiday allowance is paid out once per year in the first week of June. For employees of a foreign nationality, or people who have left employment, they are paid out on a weekly basis.

Holiday hours are paid out once you have taken leave or left employment.

If you have left employment, the amounts set aside will be paid six weeks after the date you left employment.

How can I find information on how much pension I have accrued?

You do not accrue pension in the first 26 weeks worked. If you are 21 or older, you will be placed on the STiPP scheme from the 27th week onwards.

As your employer will pay your contributions, you will not see any amounts on your payslip. The 'psn' box at the top of your payslip will show whether you have been placed on the STiPP pension scheme ('J' for yes; 'N' for no).

After you have worked 78 weeks or have reached phase B, you will be removed from the basic scheme and put onto the STiPP 'plus' pension scheme. From this point on, you as an employee will make a % contribution to your pension.
